

Wolfberg Arch, Cederberg

As part of my Year in the Wild journey to South Africa's most special nature reserves, I explored the CapeNature wilderness area of the Cederberg for two weeks. For one of the nights, my girlfriend and I hiked up to the Wolfberg Arch and slept under blazing stars. During the night, we woke up to the crashing of a massive rock fall in the distance; the earth seemed to shake, but the Arch stood firm. This was the view the following morning. Photo by Scott Ramsay. For more on his experiences of South Africa's wildernesses, visit www.yearinthewild.com.

 Including a person in a landscape image not only indicates scale and provides a focal point, but also makes the viewer wish they were there, an essential element in travel photography.

U
L
T
I
M
A
T
E

GETAWAYS

To see your images
on these pages, email
getaway@ramsaymedia.co.za.

